Chairperson Colloton called the meeting to order and called the Committee's attention to a handout from the PEW Foundation, "Reforming Mississippi's Prison System". (Attachment 1) She explained to the Committee that Mississippi passed a bill in 2008 increasing their good time credit policy for non-violent offenders making them eligible for parole after serving 25 percent of their prison sentence putting the risk analysis instrument to work through the parole board. How to use the risk analysis instrument in a way to save money.

SB 459 - Juvenile offenders; jury trials

Chairperson Colloton opened the floor for the continuation of the hearing on SB 459. She called on Jason Thompson, Office of the Revisor, to review the bill. Mr. Thompson stated the bill would clarify the court has the discretion to revoke, without notice, the stay and juvenile sentence of the extended jurisdiction of a juvenile offender and order the imposition of the adult sentence if the court finds that a juvenile committed a new offense or violated one or more conditions of the Juvenile's sentence.

Chairperson Colloton introduced Natalie Gibson, Kansas Judicial Council, a proponent of the bill. Ms. Gibson explained the bill further and called the Committee's attention to her written response to questions asked in the first portion of the hearing on the bill on March 9, 2010. (Attachment 2) Ms. Gibson then introduced Wade Bowie, Assistant District Attorney, Douglas County, and a member of a Child in Need of Care and Juvenile Offender Advisory Committee. Mr. Bowie explained the options of the juvenile sentencing to the Committee while addressing their questions.

Upon the conclusion of Mr. Bowie's testimony, Chairperson Colloton introduced, Lara Blake Bors, Assistant Finney County Attorney, representing the Kansas County and District Attorneys Association, to give follow-up opponent testimony on SB 459. Ms. Bors addressed the questions of the Committee while giving her follow-up testimony stating she is not in favor of the bill.

A question and answer session followed regarding the language change from "may" to "shall" with some Committee members having concerns.

Chairperson Colloton called for others wishing to testify, being none, she closed the hearing on SB 459 and announced to the Committee they would work this bill tomorrow along with others previously heard.

The meeting was adjourned at 2:40 p.m. with the next meeting scheduled for March 16, 2010 at 1:30 p.m in room 144-SW.

Colleagues:

At the request of the Public Safety Performance Project of the Pew Center on the States, the JFA Institute worked with the Mississippi Department of Corrections to analyze recent developments in the state and produce Reforming Mississippi's Prison System, a memorandum documenting the reforms and their impact on the state's prison population.

Mississippi provides an example of a state that, prior to the fiscal crisis, began a series of sentencing reforms with broad support that were designed to enhance public safety and control corrections costs by concentrating its prison space on more serious offenders. The most significant reform changed the state's "truth-in-sentencing" law. Non-violent offenders in Mississippi are now eligible for parole after serving 25 percent of their prison sentence, down from the requirement of 85 percent that was established in 1995. This change was passed by the legislature and signed into law in 2008 by Governor Haley Barbour.

The JFA Institute analysis found:

- By instituting changes to its parole eligibility requirements and parole risk assessment instrument, Mississippi between July 2008 and August 2009 released 3,076 inmates earlier than they would have been under prior law. The median sentence reduction of those released was 13 months.
- Through August 2009, 121 of those released offenders have been returned to custody—116 for technical violations of parole; five for non-violent offenses. One reason for the low recidivism rate is the use of a newly-developed risk assessment instrument to help authorities decide which inmates are suitable for release.
- The JFA Institute estimates that the reforms will permit Mississippi to avoid having to build and operate an additional 5,000 prison beds over the next 10 years.

While these results are encouraging, it is important to recognize that they are preliminary. The most recent of the legislative changes took effect in July 2008 so their long-term impact remains to be seen. Moreover, the report does not address any efforts that the state is taking to ensure strong supervision of the additional parolees.

We hope that you find this document to be informative and helpful in understanding the different approaches that states are taking to control the prison population while maximizing public safety.

The informational content and conclusions expressed in this memorandum are those of the JFA Institute and do not necessarily reflect those of The Pew Charitable Trusts.*

Re: Senate Bill 459

Date: March 12, 2010

In the hearing on SB 459, Tuesday, March 9th, the Committee asked about the typical conditions ordered in an Extended Jurisdiction Juvenile (EJJ) case. While there are variations, depending the circumstances in the case and services offered in the community, conditions in EJJ cases are usually the same as in regular juvenile cases. Some of the conditions typically entered are:

- regular reporting to Court Services Officer or Juvenile Justice Authority, and being truthful with them;
- notification of contact with law enforcement;
- notification of changes in residence;
- class attendance, or in the alternative work and GED;
- curfew;
- no contact orders with co-defendants, and avoid people on probation or parole;
- no contact orders with victims;
- community service;
- payment of fines, costs, etc.;
- alcohol and drug evaluation and follow-up (including treatment);
- no purchase of alcohol or drugs, and avoid being in places where alcohol is served.

Depending on the individual case and the services offered in the community, mental health evaluation and/or counseling, or anger management counseling may also be ordered.

Attachment # 27

I have enclosed a few "real world" examples from two jurisdictions in Kansas (identifying information has been removed) that represent what could be considered as a "starting point" for terms and conditions ordered in many, if not most, juvenile offender cases, including EJJ cases, in which the juvenile portion of the sentence is probation or some community based program. If the offender's juvenile sentence is to the custody of the Commissioner, there are a different set of requirements and the court can only recommend terms and conditions (with some particular exceptions such as suspending/restricting driving privileges, etc.)

The Committee also asked how often juvenile cases were prosecuted under this extended jurisdiction. According to the Kansas Sentencing Commission, in FY 2009, 7 EJJ convictions were reported on adult journal entries. In three of these, the underlying adult sentences were prison sentences while 4 were probation sentences. The convictions originated in Allen, Ellsworth, Greeley and Sedgwick counties. Offenses for which probation was ordered as the underlying sentence included fleeing and eluding, burglary and criminal possession of a firearm. Offenses for which prison was the underlying adult sentence included 2nd degree murder, aggravated robbery and aggravated criminal sodomy. Records indicated that 1 EJJ offender was revoked and sent to KDOC during FY 2009.

While these numbers appear low, it is important to note that they likely only pertain to the number of EJJ offenders who had their juvenile sentence revoked. It would not include those juvenile offenders who, although sentenced under EJJ, successfully completed the juvenile sentence and were not revoked. According to the Office of Judicial Administration and the Juvenile Justice Authority, juvenile journal entries are not tracked so there isn't any way to determine the actual number of EJJ prosecutions short of contacting every juvenile court.

Please let me know if you would like any additional information.

Sincerely,

Natalie Gibson
