

40 years ago I was bullied; beck then I had to take care of it by myself. The expectations that society had back then were very different that the ones that we have today.

Bullied mostly happened at school and for the most part it stayed there, but today's world brings new technology and this extends the problem of bullying to a 24/7 situation. Cell phones, voice messages, text messages, Facebook, twitter all become tools for those who like to bully others.

We can ignore the fact that a kid that's being bullied has enormous amount of stress and when this follows them everywhere they look it can be devastating.

The other day I saw a bumper sticker that read "My kid beats up your honor student at school", I don't think that Lisa and Rick Morawitz or the parents of any kid who had been hurt emotionally or physically by bullies will find this advertisement amusing.

I stand by the Morawitz and any other parent whose kid had been bullied at school or anywhere else. Something is got to be done, now before more fall victims to this act of violence.
