These trees form the foundation for a small but thriving industry in Kansas that produces an average of three million pounds of pecans annually. WHEREAS, The streets of Chetopa are lined with pecan trees; in a recent survey, one out of four trees in town was a pecan tree. During the harvest season, every business in town sells locally grown pecans, and two businesses feature locally grown pecans during the entire year. Other businesses crack pecans mechanically or sell equipment for the pecan industry; and

WHEREAS, The community recently celebrated its first annual Pecan Fest. School children designed posters to advertise the event; vendors set up business in the city's Veterans Park; a pecan cookbook was compiled and sold; field trips were organized to show students the importance of the pecan industry; and a Pecan Prince and Princess were crowned by the mayor to cap the events of the day; and
